

As her family fell apart with her drunkard father chasing the allure of the 'gold rush,' the already hardened girl commenced her entrepreneurial independence through working a myriad of odd jobs, one of which was behind the local bar where she found she had a knack for charming and manipulating the most unsavoury of characters. Lady Burra would often bribe and blackmail the unscrupulous for easy money and jewellery, she quickly developed a particular pension for emeralds, as the striking green reminded her of her mother's childhood tales of Ireland. At the age of 18 Lady Burra had her first real run in with the law, her entrepreneurial ways had landed her running a small illegal alcohol racket selling self-distilled and stolen whiskey to thirsty miners! However learning the local constable's wife held a similar pension for emeralds, she was able to charm her way out of a sure conviction.

Despite being a hardened and successful entrepreneur, her heart was quickly stolen. One night, a handsome man – Ronan De Barra – an American Brewer, was introduced via an illegal card, whisky and beer night Lady Barra had organised. Ronan was smoother than silk and appeared genuine and unlike other men that roamed Barra town, he had come to Barra with a bigger vision which was to brew a new drop for thirsty miners... they immediately fell in love. As time passed it became apparent that De Barra's silky smooth person wasn't the complete package, and his wealth was discovered to be more past than present. De Barra did however possess an un-matched skill, and that was the ability to brew beer which ran in the bloodlines of his family.
